 (Denver, CO) Community College of Denver (CCD) was the only community college selected to present at the National Student Leadership Conference/Institute hosted by the Campus Information and Visitor Services Association (CIVSA), Jan. 10-11 at Furman University in Greenville, SC. Student leaders and professional staff from across the country attended.

Presenting from CCD were Dustin Grote, assistant director of Student Leadership and Orientation, and two CCD Student Ambassadors, Xuan Tran and Bentley Chhim. Chhim serves as the president of Student Ambassador Leadership, a student organization focusing on the development of leadership skills in its members.

With a presentation entitled, "Inspire, Teach, Empower: Create a culture of excellence in student leaders," the CCD team of Grote, Tran and Chhim discussed the philosophy and success of the CCD Student Ambassador program. The Inspire, Teach, Empower pyramid model for leadership guides all of the processes of selection, training, and excellence. At CCD, Student Ambassadors are actively involved in student recruitment and retention including leading campus tours, participating in programming available on campus and playing instrumental roles in CCD new student orientation.

The CCD presentation was very favorably received with the expectation that several colleges and universities will begin to integrate the Inspire, Teach, Empower model into their student leadership programs.
